Award Description	To restore apporoximately 328 acres of estuarine wetland habitat in nearshore, shallow bay waters of West Galveston Bay, Texas. Historical loss of wetlands have occurred in this area as a result of development, wind and wave action, and relative sea level rise. The project will construct wetland habitat within two adjacent sites (Galveston Island State Park and Jumbile Cove) using sediment hydraulically dredged from the bay bottom and placed in areas designed to raise the elevation of the bay bottom to a point suitable for planting of transplanted wetland vegetation. The project will undergo a final design phase from July to October 2009 that will deliver plans, specifications, and a Construction Contract Documents, followed by public solicitation of a construction contractor from October to November 2009, and then a construction period from November 2009 to August 2010. The measure for project success will be the project achieving and maintaining specified elevations and percent coverage of the habitat features, followed by a post-project monitoring of the growth and colonization of transplanted vegetation for compliance to pre-determined success criteria developed by the recipient and the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.
